Hongkong, June 17th, 1882. An English translation of the text of the treaty between the Empires of Brazil and China, which was ratified at Shanghai on the 3rd instant, has been laid before our readers. As a matter of course, its main provisions vary little from those of the treaties concluded with other powers. In two rather important particulars, however, it will be seen that the Brazilian Treaty differs from preceding treaties, and it is significant that in Minister to Holland and Denmark, accompanied sion to China." is precisely the same in effect as, though different in phraseology to, Article II. of the American Commercial Treaty of 1880. It is not likely that the commerce between Brazil and China will ever be very considerable, unless it grows up with the introduction of a Chinese population in the great South American Empire. The treaty was negotiated, of course, with the avowed object of promoting the emigration of Chinese labourers to Brazil, and it now remains to be seen whether it will have the effect desired by the Brazilian planters. We hope it may, but the experience of other States that have entered into emigration -conventions with China is not very encouraging. The Chinese Government are right in endeavouring to obtain guarantees for the good treatment of their subjects, and no one can blame them for placing obstacles in the way of emigration to countries where there were grounds for There is, in the case of Brazil, every reason

Qthello is the central figure of the tragedy, and although the character of Iago is a greater greation and gives more scope for the display of histrionic talent yet the effect of the piece must be marred if Othello has not sufficient weight and force. It is unpleasant to us to have to speak disparagingly of Mr. Ogden's performance. He had ovidently given careful study to the part and formed a conception of the character, but his execution fell short of his intention. Had he attempted loss he might perhaps have accomplished more. He imitated Herr Band mann in speaking in too high a key when under the influence of passion or excitement and as he had his voice very imperfectly under control the effect was extremely unpleasant. His features, too, were hardly appropriate to the character. Othello should be an undoubtedly handsome man: Mr. Orden's representation was more like a swaggering corsair than the "lefty minded Moor " of Shakespears, and he looked an altogether unlikely person to win the love-

COAL BY WIRE. The proposal of Sir Henry Bessemer to electric machines, worked by the Falls of than 26,250 horse-power, so obtained could be conveyed to a distance of 300 miles by in diameter, with a loss in transmission of find out the way most likely to suit him not more than 20 per ceut, and hence delibest. Far from despairing, we think he is vering at the other end of the wire 21,000 horse-power. Sir Henry exclaims, "What a magnificent vista of legitimate mercantile enterprise this simple fact opens up for our connect London with one of our nearest coalfields by means of a copper rod of one inch in diameter and capable of transmitting 84,000 horse-power to London, and thus practically bring up the coal by wire instead of by rail?" He supplies the equivalent in coal of this amount of motive power. Assuming that each horse-power can be genernted by the consumption of 3lb. of coal per hour, and that the engines work six days and a-balf per week, we should require an consumption of coal equal to 1.012,600 tons to produce such a result. Now, all this coal would, in the case assumed, be burned at the pit's mouth at a cost of 6s. per ton for large and 2s. per ton for small coal—that is, at less than one-fourth the cost of coal in London. This would immensely reduce the cost of electric light, and of the motive power now used in London for such a vast variety of purposes, and at the same time save us from the enormous volumes of smoke and foul gases which this million of toas of coal would make if burned in our midst. A 1-inch copper rod would cost about £533 per mile, and if laid to a colliery 120 miles away, the interest at a per cent on its first cost would be less than I per ton on the coal practically conveyed by it direct into the house of the consumer. From what we have quoted, will be seen that the proposal of Henry local geography and ethnology have been especially studied of late years, and most fruitful works have been published. We need only name the "Sbopnik svedenie o Kavkazskikh gortsakh" (recueil of information about the Caucasian mountaineers), or the numerous managraphs of Generals Ooslar and Borget, the "Journal of the Caucasian Geographic Society," all of which have rendered immense services to grographers and philelogists, to show what a useful literary activity the Russians have shown in their new As he sighed his soul, in music, at the maiden or provinces.
